57. – 60. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

Leonardo's importance as a painter may be summarized by saying that he was the first master of the high Renaissance style, and of all his scientific researches that which he most fully devoted to this end was his study of light and shade. Many changes came about in Italian painting around the turn of the 15th-16th century, for which he more than anyone else was responsible. As regards subject matter and composition, painting became less realistic and more classical but as regards treatment it became more naturalistic and closer to life, which was partly the result of increased knowledge of anatomy and an interest in light and shade. In his rare excursions into classical subjects, such as the "Leda", Leonardo's approach is intensely personal. Indeed, drawings by Leonardo which seem to derive from antique art are excessively rare and there is no evidence of his interest in the celebrated collections of Lorenzo the Magnificent or Pope Leo X, even though he was living in close contact with both of these. This trend is not belied by the "Last Supper" even though it epitomizes the spirit of classical art.

57. It is clear from the passage that, though Leonardo sometimes chose subjects from classical sources,----.

- A) This is because he wanted to conform to current interests
- B) he gave them his own special individual touch
- C) they were mostly confined to his drawings
- D) these are not among his best paintings
- E) this was usually because of his patrons' archaeological interests

58. According to the passage, a major contribution Leonardo made to the art of painting in the Renaissance was ---- .

- A) his concern with the interaction of light and shade
- B) the archaeological setting of the backgrounds of his paintings
- C) the blend of Christian and pagan motifs and themes
- D) the inclusion of more realistic accessory detail in the composition
- E) the introduction of a more intellectual and historical approach

59. The passage makes the point that, though there was a tendency among Renaissance painters to favour classical subjects, ---- .

- A) their drawings show that they had a sound knowledge of anatomy
- B) Leonardo himself was never concerned with them
- C) patrons of the arts, like Lorenzo the Magnificent, were opposed to this trend
- D) the depictions of scenes from daily life were far more popular
- E) their treatment of these classical subjects became far more natural and true to life

60. As we understand from the passage, even though Leonardo was a major representative of Renaissance art, ----.

- A) in his own day he received little recognition except from Lorenzo the Magnificent and Pope Leo X
- B) it is for his "Last Supper" that he is primarily remembered
- C) he was nevertheless different from his contemporaries in a variety of ways
- D) his main interest was actually in the study of anatomy
- E) he contributed very little to the changes that were taking place in his time

At first sight, doing away with paper and letting computers register votes seems an attractive proposition, at least in theory. Electronic votes can be easily counted and recounted. At a mock election held in Palm Beach, USA, for instance, it took no more than an hour to count all the votes. Ironically it is computer scientists, not officials, who are counseling caution. There is no way to verify that ballots are recorded, transmitted and tabulated properly, argues one computer-science professor. For one thing, it is theoretically impossible to determine whether computer systems are free from programming bugs. Many people feel that elections should not be paperless. They would like to see touch-screen systems connected direct to a printer to produce physical evidence of a voter's choice. Such a printout could be inspected by the voter and kept as evidence in case there were problems with the electronic voting system.

- 61. As it has been emphasized in the passage, a computerized vote ----.
- A) has frequently been used in the United States.
  - B) needs to be supported with some sort of tangible evidence on paper
  - C) has so far attracted very little serious attention and is unlikely to do so.
  - D) cannot be printed out for evidence
  - E) can easily be correctly recorded and tabulated.

- 62. As we understand from the passage, one of the benefits of computerized voting is that ---- .
- A) no one can possibly manipulate the process
  - B) it keeps a permanent record of the votes
  - C) the results can be obtained very rapidly
  - D) it requires very little preparation and organization
  - E) it provides the voter with the evidence of his/her vote

- 63. As it is pointed out in the passage, it is the computer specialists themselves who ---- .
- A) recognize the possible drawbacks of computerized voting
  - B) strongly support the process of computerized voting
  - C) will be responsible for the programming of the voting system
  - D) are, in fact, producing programming bugs
  - E) originally came up with the idea of computerized voting

- 64. We learn from the passage that part of the skepticism concerning computerized voting systems is----.
- A) that many people feel they can't use them properly
  - B) that there are many striking instances of when they have failed
  - C) that they can be extremely costly
  - D) due to the fact that they are all vulnerable to programming defects
  - E) that the process of registering the votes is a very slow one

65. – 68. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

Chief imperial architect Sinan was in his eighties when he built the Selimiye, which marks the zenith of his lifelong endeavour to perfect the domed building. The Suleymaniye Mosque had taken him nearly to the zenith of his creative power, but Selimiye was the crown of his genius. The mosque was built to commemorate the conquest of Cyprus, perhaps Selim II's sole military achievement. Either because no hilltop remained in Istanbul worthy of such a monument or perhaps as a gesture of loyalty to a city where Selim had spent nine years of his life, it was decided that the mosque should be built in Edirne. The chosen site was the hill of Sanbayir overlooking the city, and the acquisition of land commenced. In those years horticulture was one of the main sources of income in Edirne, and Sanbayir was covered with flower nurseries growing principally tulips. The story goes that a woman who owned a small tulip garden here objected to selling her land, and resisted official pressure for a considerable time. Finally, they took her to see Sinan, hoping the architect could persuade her. She agreed, but on one condition, that in some part of the mosque there should be a sign that there had once been a tulip garden. Sinan kept his word and had an inverted tulip motif carved on one of the marble pillars at the eastern corner of the muezzin's gallery in the centre of the mosque.

65. According to the passage, it was with the Selimiye Mosque that Sinan ----.

- A) reached the height of his architectural achievements.
- B) lost the favour of the Sultan
- C) transformed Edirne, making her into an imperial city
- D) repaid the debt he felt he owed to Edirne
- E) pioneered a number of structural techniques

66. We understand from the passage that there was apparently more than one reason ---- .

- A) why Selim II chose Sinan as the architect of his new mosque
- B) why Edirne, not Istanbul, was chosen as the site of the Selimiye Mosque
- C) which made the woman refuse to give up her flower garden
- D) for Sinan's depiction of the tulip in an inverted position
- E) for Sinan's preference for the dome over other types of roofing

67. It is pointed out in the passage that in Sinan's age ---- .

- A) the Suleymaniye Mosque was never surpassed by any other work of architecture
- B) the dome was the major architectural innovation
- C) the tulip gardens of Edirne were a major source of wealth for the city
- D) the conquest of Cyprus was just one example of Selim II's great victories
- E) Edirne was beginning to excel Istanbul as a fashionable city

68. The phrase "Sinan kept his word" means that Sinan ---- .

Norway was transformed by the discovery of oil and gas in the North Sea in the 1960s and its previously agricultural-based economy saw an explosion of wealth. But since then a fierce but seemingly misplaced sense of national pride appears to be preventing Norwegian companies from making sensible business decisions to capitalize on the natural advantages the country has been handed. State intervention has supported entrepreneurial business ever since, but now times are tougher. Companies in other parts of Scandinavia have realized that in order to keep ahead in a global economy, and win foreign market share, they not only need greater financial power but also partners with local knowledge. However, rather than taking a similar proactive approach, Norwegian companies are adopting a defensive stance and seem perplexed by a sudden wave of hostile takeover bids.

69. As we understand from the passage, the Norwegian economy ----.

- A) has been integrated into the global economy
- B) has preserved its traditional agricultural pattern despite the discovery of North Sea oil and gas
- C) is still in the forefront of European economy
- D) received a big lift through revenues coming from oil and gas
- E) is fully based upon its oil and gas resources

70. According to the passage, in contrast to Norwegian companies, the companies of other Scandinavian countries ---- .

- A) have mostly been taken over by big, global companies
- B) are putting their oil reserves to very good use
- C) are aware of the advantages of working with foreign partners
- D) have constantly received financial aid from the state
- E) are going through a period of recession

71. It is suggested in the passage that a major cause for Norway's reluctance to cooperate with foreign companies is ---- .

- A) the outcome of the importance given to her agricultural economy
- B) the fear that she would lose control of her natural resources
- C) her concern about the future of the oil reserves in the North Sea
- D) the fact that she doesn't realize the advantages of such a policy
- E) the hostility she constantly faces in other Scandinavian countries

72. We understand from the passage that Norwegian companies, at present, ---- .

- A) are fully confident that their policies will put them well ahead of other Scandinavian companies
- B) are investing heavily in the North Sea oil and gas industry
- C) are collectively resisting every form of state intervention
- D) are taking a strong proactive approach to the global economy
- E) have no decisive policy as regards global partnerships

It is thought that sails were invented by the Egyptians around 3400 B.C. Harnessing wind power for sea transport was a crucial factor in the development of civilisation, enabling Egyptian sailors to carry the timber they needed from the thickly forested coasts of Lebanon, and later taking them to Cyprus where there were plentiful deposits of copper and to the coasts of Anatolia. Trade began to flourish in the eastern Mediterranean, but of the thousands of ships which came and went from Anatolian harbours, some were inevitably wrecked in storms. The ships and cargoes which sank to the seabed over the centuries are today providing illuminating evidence about maritime and commercial history. Since the first underwater excavations were carried out in Turkish coastal waters in 1960, much has been discovered about shipbuilding technology in antiquity and the commodities the ships were carrying. Undoubtedly, the most important wreck excavated so far is the Uluburun Wreck, which is the earliest of all, dating from the late Bronze Age. This ship sank 3300 years ago and is accounted one of the most important ten archaeological discoveries of the 20th century. The gold seal of Queen Nefertiti and a two-leaf wooden book, the oldest book in the world, are among the hundreds of remarkable finds.

73. It is pointed out in the passage that underwater archaeology along the coasts of Turkey ----.
- A) has only recently begun to gain recognition in the world
  - B) goes back for over four decades
  - C) has, apart from the Uluburun Wreck, proved disappointing
  - D) has just about exhausted all possible sites of wrecks
  - E) has so far only been concerned with the Bronze Age wrecks

74. According to the passage, the Uluburun Wreck ---- .

- A) has provided much evidence about the relationship between Anatolia and the eastern Mediterranean
- B) was the first one ever to be discovered in Turkish coastal waters
- C) has shed light on the kind of goods transported by ships in ancient times
- D) has yielded some extremely precious artifacts
- E) was richer in treasures than any other discovered in the Mediterranean

75. According to the passage, the invention of sails in Egypt ---- .

- A) enabled ships to travel long distances more safely
- B) rapidly had an adverse effect on the maritime activities of neighboring countries
- C) resulted from the need to carry copper from Cyprus
- D) made her the leading maritime power in the eastern Mediterranean
- E) made it possible for the Egyptians to engage in overseas trade

76. As we learn from the passage, one of the benefits of Turkey's underwater archaeological discoveries ---- .

- A) was that it opened up a new field of study
- B) has been to attract a great deal of foreign attention
- C) is that our knowledge of ancient shipping and trade has increased
- D) has been to solve a long controversy concerning trade links between Anatolia and Egypt
- E) has been to establish the definite dating of Egypt's expansion into Lebanon

The serious writer is an interpreter, not an inventor. Like a good actor, he is an intermediary between a segment of experience and an audience. The actor must pay some consideration to his audience: he must be careful, for instance, to face toward it, not away from it. But the great actor is the one who is wrapped up in the thoughts and feelings of the role he is playing, not the one who is continually stealing glances at the audience to determine the effect of his last gesture or bit of business. The actor who begins taking his clues from the audience rather than from the script soon becomes a "ham": he exaggerates and falsifies for the sake of effects. The writer, too, though he must pay some consideration to his reader, must focus his attention primarily on his subject. If he begins to think primarily of the effect of his tale on his reader, he begins to manipulate his material, to heighten reality, to contrive and falsify for the sake of effects. The serious writer selects and arranges his material in order to convey most effectively the feeling or truth of a human situation. The less serious writer selects and arranges his material so as to stimulate a response in the reader.

- 77. It is emphasized in the passage that the main concern of a great writer
- A) is to give a powerful representation of the human condition
  - B) is to persuade his readers to believe as he does
  - C) is not to interpret a human situation but to evoke a memory
  - D) is to give multiple meanings to a single situation
  - E) is not so much content as form and style

78. according to the passage, a second-rate actor ---

- A) is very conscious of the truth of what he is playing
- B) gives priority to the text not to the audience
- C) is selective about the roles he is willing to play
- D) likes to interpret his role in different ways
- E) gives too much importance to pleasing his audiences

79. We understand from the passage that one quality the great actor and the great writer have in common is ----.

- A) their need for encouragement from the public
- B) the importance each gives to his art, not to the responses to it
- C) the desire to please at all costs
- D) the tendency to present everything in a more colorful and exciting manner
- E) their fondness for exaggeration and stimulation

80. The expression "the great actor is the one who is wrapped up in the thoughts and feelings of in the role he is playing" ----.

- A) denotes that what makes an actor great is his absorption in the role
- B) signifies that an actor must give more emphasis to his own thoughts and feelings
- C) means that the greatness of an actor results from his fondness for his role
- D) suggests that the success of an actor depends upon his manipulation of the audience
- E) indicates the actor's concern with the reactions of the audience to his performance
